Auction Results

From Kentwood Wells

Auction Team Breker, run by society member Uwe Breker, reports on some magic-lantern related treasures sold at an auction in March. Among the items sold was an original 1671 edition of Athanasius Kircher's Ars Magna Lucis et Umbrae, which contains the first published illustration of a magic lantern; the sale price was $8760.

Also sold was a collection of 23,000 glass slides comprising the professional photo archive of Carl Simon of Düsseldorf. The collection sold for $43,560, which seems like a lot of money in total, but represents a price of less than $2.00 per slide.

Projection of Titanic onto Giant Iceberg

Swiss light artist Gerry Hofstetter projected pictures of the Titanic on a giant iceberg off Greenland to mark the 100th anniversary of its maiden voyage.

A light projection of the Titanic on a 500-meter-long iceberg in the Northern Polar sea of Greenland, during the night of 13 April 2012.

Swiss artist Gerry Hofstetter is one of the best-known light artists working today. He uses light to project huge images in unexpected places, like a cross on the famous Matterhorn peak in the Alps, and hieroglyphics on the outside of the pyramids in Giza. His projects transform monuments, buildings and landscapes into something new.

The Magic Lantern: Illuminating a Bygone Era

Once upon a time there was a world without moving pictures or even color photographs, where the oil-fired Magic Lantern revealed images of far-off lands and famous tales. Let us take you back to the era of lantern shows to experience the charm of the hand-colored glass slides.

The exhibition, designed by students, includes interactive displays, antique Magic Lanterns, and glass slides from the turn of the 20th century. Collections featured are on loan from our Library's Special Collection, and private collections including the Island City Masonic Lodge. Topics include Victorian fashion, fairy tales, phantasmagoria, and historic events such as the 1893 Chicago Worlds Fair and 1906 San Francisco Earthquake.

Step back in time to an age when steam-power replaced horse-power and treat yourself to a show in our traveling lanternist's tent!

Tupac's Posthumous Live Tour

The stage illusion known as "Pepper's Ghost."

At first, the virtual Tupac Shakur looked like any other video image. But then he stepped off the screen, gave shout-outs to Dr. Dre and Snoop Dogg, and started working the stage, mike in hand, just like old times. The crowd at the Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival gasped, then cheered wildly. As a YouTube commenter wrote, it was as if they had "seen a ghost."

In fact they had. Last week's appearance — perhaps "apparition" is a better word — of Tupac onstage more than 15 years after he was fatally shot was created using an old-fashioned stage illusion known as "Pepper's Ghost." Popularized by John Henry Pepper, a professor of the Royal Polytechnic Institution in London, it was used in 1862, in a stage version of Charles Dickens's "Haunted Man."

Lantern slide programs enthralled 19th-century audiences. A projector containing a candle or oil lamp would transmit and enlarge images from hand-painted glass slides onto a wall. A more modern version used an incandescent bulb as a light source and projected slides made from hand-tinted photographs.

Lynette Miller, the Historical Society's head of collections, curates this exhibit of lantern slides, projectors, and advertising materials organized in conjunction with the national convention of the Magic Lantern Society, which takes place June 21-24 in Tacoma.

On June 1 at 7 p.m. and June 23 at 7:30 p.m., you can see for yourself what the excitement was about. You can enjoy the entertainment the Victorians enjoyed at two Magic Lantern Shows presented in conjunction with the convention.
